There are rumors that Slavin is over-confident and has not paid the attention to his training that he should, but the wise man will not back on such stories, for victory means fully as much to Slavin as to Kilrain, and Charley Mitchell understands that his man is not going up against a weakling.

Kilrain, on the contrary, is a wary man and a head fighter.

The interest in the contest is increased by these facts. It will be a battle of two dissimilar methods, and the question as to which is the better will probably be decided to the satisfaction of the sports.

Slavin depends largely upon his brute strength, while Kilrain is a scientific boxer, and if he can avoid body punishment he stands a good chance of coming out the winner.

He has been instructed to clinch whenever possible, and if he follows his instructions and takes advantage of the opportunities to get in his head hitting, Slavin will find that rushing is not a picnic in ten three-minute

GRAND OPERA-HOUSE. "Faust" was sung at the Grand Opera-House last night in an extremely enjoyable manner. The audience was not as large as it might have been, owing to the untheatrical weather. The people present, however, indulged in a good deal of enthusiasm. The ast was as follows: Faust, F. Michelena; Marguerite, Mme. Louise Natalie; Siebel, Miss Anna Russell; Mephistopheles, N. H. Clark; Valentine, William Mertens; Wagner, F. Borneman, and Martha, Miss Rose Linde, N. H. Clark was a very good Mephistopheles, and although Mme. Natalle has a good voice, and knows how to use it.

STANDARD THEATRE. The Standard Theatre opened its doors last ight to admit a peculiar kind of audience anxious to find amusement in a programm turnished by a Creole variety company. Of course, this is the silly season, and managers must do something for a living-or, at any rate, try to believe that they must. In spite of these extenuating circumstances it is diffian organization with his ideas of a first-class theatre. Colored people sang and posed, and made the night hideous generally. They were by no means pleasing to look at, and the effect of the whole entertainment was disagreeable.

COLUMBUS THEATRE.

"May Blossom," David Belasco's well-known domestic play, was presented at the Columbus Theatre last night. The audience was melted so efficiently by the torrid condition of the elements that the pathes of Mr. Belasco's play had very little work to do. The piece was nicely acted and well put upon the stage. It is still vital. Plays that appeal so strongly to human nature live in verdant usefulness, while less youthful efforts dealing with the forced and theatrical side of life, pass into sere yellowness.

"I didn't get any money out of old Gotrox." said the selicitor of charity, "but I evidently made some progress."

"How?"
"Why, I got him to say that charity ought to begin at homer. It is the first time, I think that he ever admitted that it ought to begin SPECIAL NOTICES.
